

Debating the exclusion from the national Renewable Energy Target of native forest biomass in 2012, and then its inclusion in 2015, the arguments were that the legislation and regulatory mechanisms would ensure that residue based operations only would be eligible for subsidy as 'renewable'.